

I hope the FCC leaves Indiana's no-call list alone. The privacy law has dramatically reduced the number of solicitations we used to receive. Before the law took effect, we did not answer the phone in the evening. Now, when the phone rings, we don't have to chance it. Or only question is "Will it be a friend or family member?" Let the states' continue to decide how to help their citizens.